

GignoSystem Japan
to launch a mobile web service [Star Trek™]

On March 19, GignoSystem Japan, Inc. (HQ in Chiyoda Ward, Tokyo; President & CEO. Keiko Iida) is set to launch a new web service for mobile phones, based on the SF drama "Star Trek", which has entertained the world for almost four decades. With the series attracting many fans in Japan, the company will be offering Japan's first mobile web contents targeting Japanese fans.

Since its launch as TV series in the United States in 1966, SF drama "Star Trek" has developed into 5 series and 10 movies. Based on massive and precise scientific data that even impress NASA staff, the profound human drama set in the outer space, has attracted fans around the world for almost 40 years, and continues to attract new fans to this day. GignoSystem Japan is to launch the "Star Trek" service after tying up with Versaly Games Inc.(U.S.), which holds the license for distributing mobile media contents based on "Star Trek" movies and TV series by Paramount Pictures. The service features cool animations, made possible on mobile phones, as well as contents that all fans would long for, including standby images of expressive Star Trek characters and voice ring tones in their unique languages. Also included are back-stage episodes that would delight devoted fans, making this a general side that offers fun to beginner fans to the die-hard fans. The "Star Trek" site will be launched on March 19 for access by KDDI's EZweb compatible mobile phones, with the service set to be gradually expanded.
